PRECIOUS REGRETS

reproduced with permission from Justin Casagrande

One word, when heard, can drain all emotion, all your energy and leave the feeling of dark emptiness, you can't help but think the worst. CANCER

I'm quiet, keep to myself, shy, don't usually speak unless spoken to, prefer to sit back and watch chain of events unfold rather than being the centre of attention, one to bottle emotion and battle myself so not to show weakness. I'm like that perfect homemade loaf of bread, standing strong and confident, rock solid on the outside, but peel back the outer layers to expose a soft warm centre that melts butter- a quality that one inherits from none other than a gentle mother. Early 20's with a life is easy no responsibility selfish attitude, to have explained to you that your Mum has CANCER. I was empty, didn't know what to think, how to react or what it was I should be feeling.

When it does, realisation hits pretty hard. Looking back I now understand that everyone deals with situations differently. Mine, I regret..... wish I could have the time back and re-live. I put up this (what I thought) positive attitude, but more so a stubborn "nothing to worry about, Mum will get through this". But deep down was that soft fluffy white bread, sensitive and fragile, tearing apart, a lost child. My way of dealing with this was ignoring the situation, didn't want to know about it and distant myself. For an outsider it probably looked as if I blamed Mum for what was happening and didn't care. I ask myself why I was like this- truth hurts, I couldn't handle it and didn't want to think of the possibilities, I really just wanted my Mum back. I isolated myself every night for hours in a gym, the only way where I could escape and clear my mind through gruelling punishment and fatigue. Amongst the sweat that would bead down my face, a camouflaged tear weighing more than the weights in front of me, held so much meaning.

How do you tell someone not to take others for granted, to appreciate and to cherish those close to you. It's not truly understood until it's been taken from you. What I would give to spend a moment, to boast my achievements to her, to show her the person I have become today, to watch the expression of pride escalate through her face, the feeling only a parent gives - to feel that warm unconditional love!

This one life experience changed me- surprisingly in a positive way. When I think back at the last moments I had with Mum, it amazes me and explains so much. She never complained, asked the question of 'Why her', or quivered for sympathy. I was so angry. You're fighting to live and your only concern is for everyone else's wellbeing, "What about you for a change!" I didn't understand. I know now why she was this way. She was one of those rare creations, 1 in a million.

Selfless, caring, put everyone before herself...right up to her last breath. These days those qualities are hard to come by, but I know from a few that are part of my life, they still exist.

Why the confession? Wanting to better yourself doesn't always have to come with the expectancy of getting something in return for self-benefit. At some point in all our lives we'll wear our hearts on our sleeves, even if it means opening yourself to vulnerability and showing your weaknesses. In some way I feel like I missed my most precious opportunity..... now that another has surfaced, I'm not letting it get away.

"My Mum is my strength, family and friends are all I need to feel alive."

The passing of my Mum as a result of cancer was enough inspiration for my cousin (Angie Nguyen) in creating "The Many Faces of Cancer"- the mission to make a difference by enabling people to celebrate the lives of their loved ones and in the process raise funds in a fun and enjoyable manner for cancer research and the services that support people with cancer, their carers, families and friends.

I'm not one to ask of much, but on this rare occasion I ask one small favour from you. It won't cost you a cent and won't take up your time. A lot to ask? I may not even know you, we possibly live different lives 1000's of km apart, but we do share one thing in common... whether you're my neighbour or on the other side of the world- Cancer affects us all in one way or another, whether through our own health or that of our family or friends. "We all have a similar story".

This cruel life changing disease does nothing but take- so its up to us to even the scores by giving back, to be infectious, a virus of our own that is so contagious we start winning for a change, and it comes about simply through the form of awareness. A simple word of mouth, a chain reaction that spreads so far around the globe- or maybe just by the click of a button. I'm asking you to 'Like' "The Many Faces of Cancer" FB page and maybe even 'Share' it amongst your family and friends.

The outcome - is you being part of HOPE, it only takes one small pebble to create the biggest ripple effect

Dear family and friends,

Two years ago, we started on a journey called the Many Faces of Cancer with our mission being to make a difference by enabling people to celebrate the lives of their loved ones, and in the process raise funds in a fun and enjoyable manner for cancer research and the services that support people with cancer, their carers, families and friends.

On Saturday the 16th of June 2012, the Many Faces of Cancer held the inaugural Charity Dinner at the Hilton in Adelaide, with the event being a success with more than 250 people in attendance raising in excess of $23,000 for Cancer Council SA.

I would like to welcome you to the second Many Faces of Cancer charity auction dinner, we have more than 300 people in attendance, many of whom came along to the first dinner and have returned bringing more family and friends. I am extremely honoured and humbled to see so many familiar faces and welcome the new people to our second dinner helping us to raise funds to support the valuable work of Cancer Council SA.

The catalyst for our first year was my amazing Auntie Maggie whom we continue to miss, and remains as an inspiration for the Many Faces of Cancer, and we have been fortunate in meeting so many wonderful people and being able to share in their stories. This year, my husband and I have been able to share the load with a committee of volunteers that have helped significantly to make this second Charity Dinner a reality.

Money raised from the Many Faces of Cancer charity auction dinner will help the Cancer Council SA to fund critical cancer research, invest in cancer prevention programs and provide support for people with cancer, their carers, families and friends.

This dinner would not have been possible without the generosity, valued support and sponsorship from the following organisations; Haycom, Hughes PR, Hilton Adelaide, Network Ten, the Chapley Group (Norwood Foodland), Finance Tactics, Duografik, Angie Boscolo Conveyancing, Tekgraphix, and HM Design as well as many prominent local South Australian businesses that have generously donated items for both our live and silent auctions.

We are going to have a wonderful night of great entertainment, excellent food and amazing auction items, so let's have some fun while we raise much needed funds for Cancer Council SA, and I look forward to being able to meet and thank you for your support.

MASTER OF CEREMONIES - MR GEORGE KAPINIARIS

George Kapiniaris is one of Australia's most versatile performers. He has accomplished skills in acting, improvising, comedy, music, guitar playing and singing and is constantly in demand.

George is one of this country's best loved comedy, music and TV stars- having had an incredible impact on popular culture over the last twenty years. George's claim to fame was his starring role in the hugely popular 'Wogs Out Of Work' stage show with Nick Giannopoulos. Since then the Australian public has continued to see him use his ethnic heritage as inspiration for future roles and performances.

George has been producer and creator of many productions including 'Acropolis now', 'The Last Proxy', 'The Flares', 'From George with Love' and the extremely successful 'Il Dago'- his production skills make him a comedian who is absolutely corporate friendly.

BAND - NEW ROMANTICS

The New Romantics have been captivating audiences all over Australia and have built a solid reputation as one of the country's top entertainment cover bands. Presenting a high energy show, New Romantics capture the sounds and essence of the world's top selling and most successful 80s artists, and with a powerful rhythm section, scorching guitars, a dynamic front man and three part vocals, there's not a tune New Romantics can't cut. A mixture of incredible sequencing, programming and live performance, New Romantics recreate the best of pop music from ABC to WHAM!

SPECIAL GUESTS - BEC AND GEORGE

Dynamic duo Rebecca and George Douros starred in Channel Nine's hit reality lifestyle program The Block Sky High in 2013. They were crowned the most popular couple of the season after winning viewer's hearts with their infectious smiles and bubbly personalities.

The couple continue to be strong advocates and work closely with The National Breast Cancer Foundation (NBCF) a foundation very close to the couple's heart and in honour of Bec's mother, Rosa, who passed away during the filming of the show. Bec & George have raised over $60,000 towards cancer research & ultimately reaching the goal of zero deaths by 2030.

The origins of Mercedes-Benz Adelaide goes back to 1950, when the company was known as British Engineering Appliances. At the time, the company held the franchise for the now long disappeared Jowett range of cars, as well as Mercedes-Benz and subsequently, Renault and DKW. On the 1st of July 2010 BEA Motors acquired Adelaide's second Mercedes-Benz dealership "Chateau Moteur" and incorporated this business into their expansive Mile End premises. After over sixty years- Australia's oldest Mercedes-Benz dealer ceased trading as "BEA Motors Pty. Ltd." and launched into the future trading as "Mercedes-Benz Adelaide". The new name symbolises a significant commitment to Mercedes-Benz and its product range well into the future in Adelaide.
